WHEELING, APRIL 21, 1890.

Is another column Mr. Hu Maxwell contributes another one of his splendid descriptive articles. His story of the Golden Tomb is no less entertaining than the many letters the INTELLIGENCER has printed from the gifted young West Virginian during the past year.

he originated.

The terrible tragedy which interrupted the plans of the Gardeld administration deprived Mr. Blaine of the privilege of conducting the diplomatic negotiations and engineering the legislation necessary to a completion of the scheme, but he had set the work in motion so skillfully that it did not stop. It seems a wise provision of Providence that a revolution provision of Providence that a revolution in American politics made it possible for him to aid in finishing what he had so great a hand in formulating. Under the agreement entered into by the Pan-American Congress, war has been abolished so far as this hemisphere is conconcerned, and all international disputes and difficulties are to be settled by arbitration. The moral effect this will have on the great that world remains to the provision of t have on the rest of the world remains to be seen.

The Cieveland-Dana Episode.

The INTELLIGENCER has always contended that low personalities were out of place in journalism. Dignified discussion of men and measures is more effective than "mud-slinging and bar room epithets. The exchange of personal abuse between journalists is not only of no effect, but is diagusting to the public. The application of belittling terms to a rival rarely, if ever, does more than lessen the writer in public esteem, and lessen the writer in public esteem, and lessen the writer in public esteem, and carries with it no argument. carries with it no argument. It is a matter or surprise that among no class of newspapers does this system of personal journalism exist to such an extent as among the great dailies of New York City, whose editors ought to be models of propriety. Not only does the disgusting habit prevail in discussions between rival friends, but their treatment of man who are condicated. sions between rival friends, but their treatment of men who are candidates for public office is of the most brutal character. A notable example is the attack of the New York Sun on ex-President Cleveland, We are glad to see good Republican papers condemning the Sun's course in vigorous terms. So long as Mr. Dana confined himself to criticisms of Mr. Cleveland's public acts and his political principles he was encouraged and applaided, but when he overaged and applauded, but when he overstepped the bounds of decency and began a tirade of abuse of the ex-President's private life he found no sympa-

The public acts of a public man belong to the pusple. To criticles them is legitimate, otherwise our politics institutions would be endanged our politics institutions would be endanged to be a supple of the public's business whether a man weights one hundred journed. It is none of the public's business whether a man has lost an armor a lee or whether he is a perfect specimen of physical development. All that concerns the people is whether he sloes or does not do his duty; whether he is true to his country or whether he is a demagone and pulling the political strings as a hypocritical preiender. And yet, because Mr. Cheveland weights more than Editor Buna. he is assailed as a fat man without brains and totally until to represent his party.

This paper has had occasion to freely criticise the ex-irresident and doubtiess will; find other occasions to do so in the future. But it is his political principles to which we object, and these are perfectly legitimate topies for discussion. It is an outragic not attack him or anyone else upon any other lines. He is to-day the most positive leader of what is known as "tariff reform." We believe that system to be destructive to American interests and shall oppose not only it, but Mr. Cleveland as its high priest, if the Demogratis shall again take him up as their standard heaver, which now seems entirely probable. But we contend that the language of the slums in political warfare is unfit for publications.

While Mr. Riley, the able politician, is saying through interviews in the Register that everything is lovely and is speaking encouragingly to the privately for "giving away" the plan of campaign, Mr. Taney, the able General Manager of the party organ, is sending to the politicians touching private opistes which betray an alarming condition of affairs. Here is one of them:

Register Oppice, Wheeling, W. Va., April 16th, 1890.

In thus assuming the management of the party Col. Taney utterly ignores the rights of the State Committee, a part of whose duty it is to look after such matters. But perhaps the Colonel has lost confidence in the competency of the horns on his own account, by constitution and has resolved to take the bull by the horns on his own account, by constituting himself a State Committee.
